

Copper Door Supports Bedford Education Foundation

It's terrific when there exists strong synergy between a community and the businesses in that community. The community supports the business and the business prospers. The business supports the community and the community prospers.

One of the best examples of this synergy will take place on December 9 at the 'private Grand Opening' of the Copper Door restaurant. On that night, the restaurant is open to the public but only via a 'suggested donation' to the Bedford Education Foundation.

The president of BEF, Charlie O'Neil, noted: "Everyone in Bedford has been watching this restaurant under construction for months and eagerly awaits its opening. The restaurant could have just opened to the public and it would have done just fine. We are thrilled that the Copper Door owners allowed us the opportunity to continue our mission to improve education in Bedford".

The principal owner of the Copper Door, Tom Boucher, also owns the T-Bones and Cactus Jacks restaurants and has long been an active supporter of Bedford activities. Tom said, "It is a pleasure to support the BEF and its mission. Part of what makes Bedford a great place for business is the strong sense of community and much of that community feeling is built around the schools".
